

The Weekly Avocet - #685

January 18th, 2026

Hello to our Poets and Nature-lovers of The Avocet community:

winter
the birds gather around the feeder

Norma Bradley - Asheville, NC - normabradley1@gmail.com

Submitted by Edwina Kadera

January Couplets

Snowflakes drift in January air, clothing branches that are bare.

Sparrows seeking berries, seeds, flutter to fulfill their needs.

Winter branches reach to sky, dancing as the clouds sail by.

Breezes brisk say wrap up tight, singing songs of winter bright.

January brings a chill, much of nature's sleeping still.

Yet each day brings moments more, stretching longer than before.

Winter sun is cherished now, hope it keeps away the plow

January days will pass, underneath the snow is grass.

Tasha Halpert

January Visions

January looks back upon the old year, sees what went wrong, weeps tears of snow.

It sees what went right, freezes that good into icicles that sparkle to inspire us anew.

January looks ahead to what can be, envision snow castles, spins drifts of potential onto sleeping roots to nourish what will grow from old roots and new seeds in the new year.

Tasha Halpert

January dreams

Bright January brings joy to children building forts and sighs to shovelers.

Birds fly in search of berries withered on bushes, a winter feast of hope.

Cold winds blow snow;
it drifts into our longings for spring and warm sun.

We wake to the cold and reach to warm our hands with our January dreams.

Tasha Halpert - North Grafton, MA - tashahal@gmail.com

The Daytime Bird

For the second year in a row, we've had a mockingbird who spends all day, every day, jumping and pouncing at our windows-- all of them. He is very determined to get inside or perhaps is in love with his own reflection.
He makes a racket pecking and pounding, literally throwing his body against the glass panes flying like a helicopter from the window sills almost all the way up to the top. He's an aggressive bird. I've seen him chase male cardinals away for no reason. I wonder if he'll keep this up once the freeze arrives tomorrow as expected.
I should get suet--he'll need to replenish his strength if he plans to continue in this weather.

He's here every minute of daylight.
He never leaves--except at night.

Emily Black - Gainesville, FL - ebblack@asrsystems.ws

A Chipmunk Child

A sleek, young chipmunk has found a place to shelter from icy weather that has ushered in our winter season. This little creature is so demure and ladylike I think she must be female. She's nestled between a large rock and the trunk of a Japanese maple tree in the protection of our courtyard. She is munching on her breakfast, probably crushed sunflower seeds that have fallen from a cluster of bird feeders hanging under spreading branches of our maple tree.

She wipes her little mouth with her paws, a lady at a fine dining establishment, her manners impeccable. Her cheeks are full and round, stuffed with possibly as much food as her full body weight-- food she will take back to her burrow to stash away for the long winter months ahead.

The sight of her makes me think of my little cousin I used to babysit when I was twelve.

She was a very refined child, pretty and small-featured, small in every way except her cheeks. where she stored half-chewed food for later enjoyment. She was my little chipmunk child.

Emily Black - Gainesville, FL - ebblack@asrsystems.ws

In a world where you can be anything, be kind." - Dr. Seuss

An Anhinga Wintering in Sunny Florida

There's usually an egret or two in the pond, but the anhinga is a special treat today, standing still as a statue with its wings held out high sunning them like a swimmer might stretch out on a deck chair in warm winter sun. An Anhinga, sometimes called a snake bird, dives to feed on underwater creatures. With only its long thin neck and head visible while it's hunting, it looks like a snake. Its feathers are not buoyant like a duck's so it must sun itself to dry out soggy plumage. Light shining on outstretched blue-black wings of this bird turns them lustrous in rainbow opalescence, giving off an iridescent glimmer. I sit still taking deep breaths, watching the sun and clouds interplay on this peaceful scene.

I love the word iridescent, both its sound and meaning.
Feeling a bit hypnotized by the glory of this moment, I wander back in my mind, letting iridescent linger-- a whisper, a prayer.

Emily Black - Gainesville, FL - eblack@asrsystems.ws

Please be kind, write to each other...

The Sun Sets Low

The sun sets low against the hills.
There are a few favored spots where it still strikes the ground.
These are first to clear, The spreading targets of the remaining warmth
The first traces of a returning sun.

Harold Sneide - Indian Hills, CO - haroldsneide@comcast.net

Visitor

This rather large old buck has settled down behind my house.

I worry about him.

He isn't moving much.

In the afternoon he comes fifty feet to the lilacs

And follows the sun around them.

Why does he stay?

He is gone with the sun.

Harold Sneide - Indian Hills, CO - haroldsneide@comcast.net

nor'easter aftermath whining grinding chain saws sound the death knell of century-old oaks and fallen firs amidst burning sawdust two-cycle fumes and a fading pine fragrance plowed over by a late-winter nor'easter devastating in its ferocity i've never seen anything like it intoned as a mantra a muffled trumpet whispering taps drifting off with the wind it's bad enough when citified halfwits move in and amputate trees – too big too many too much shade squirrels nuts berries bird poop too messy i want more grass but when those furious tempests ravage and devour we mourn their loss for those majestic trees they'd belonged to us all

Lloyd Abrams - Freeport, NY - lbabrams@gmail.com

Last Dance: Elegy for a Great Blue Heron

I try not to think of that white winter day icy flakes hissed against the windows and across the river, you stood amidst whirls of snow, under two sycamores, branches crossed in a cathedral-like arch.

I try not to think of that white winter day when through the snow-globe of my binoculars I watched your hunched figure, felt the heaviness of your beak.
You seemed to catch my eye for a moment, then turned away, fluffed off a dusting of snow.

If only I could have done something old friend.
For years I admired your patience, your elegance, your skill on the hunt. I felt blessed those evenings the water was still, and the night sounds had begun, you'd glide across the river like a spirit.

So, I try not to think of that white winter day wind howled through the eaves, and as I got into bed your lonely silhouette stood huddled against the moonlit snow.

I woke to a brilliant sunrise. Ice gleamed along the shoreline. Under the sycamores, the blues and silvers of your lifeless body rested on an altar of drifted snow.
I try not to think of that white winter day.

Instead, I think of the spring morning I watched you spread your wings at the top of the tallest pine and dance.

(This poem first appeared in the anthology, Rooster in the Henhouse - stories and poems)

Russell Reece - Laurel, DE - russ_reece@yahoo.com bright twinkling snowflakes crystals complex and unique transforming landscapes

Floyd D. Anderson

Lessons Learned

Rote memories:
Frost's snowy woods his road not taken and Hugo 'making certain it all goes on' the lot of them: Larkin and Langston and Maya all putting it out there so, unlike those green bound books with their perforated pages we filled to move from one level to another unlike Cummins who knew how to teach 'in just spring' and Ogden making us laugh and even blush so that if asked what was learned I can't admit to a single page from that green book but those other lessons remain firmly embedded so that I pull on the storm coat and plunge my feet into my boots to venture out into the whiteness of the snow to make new tracks in snowy woods taking paths less traveled.

Pat Anthony

Feeders sway

from summer's plant hangers on the deck sunflower seed and berry suet lure birds gone silent in the woods the great Kansas River valley bowed by a blanket of snow drapery tossed over treetops billowing onto hills dropping down to nestle creatures big and small overwintering in last autumn's leaves sky sealing to snow until day falls away leaving a lone chickadee in the dusk.

Pat Anthony

Winter Cedars

We timber out the cedar row back to fence lines leaving spotty trunks and hauling fragrant branches to ash later on the burn pile, acid for blueberries beyond the homemade pole feeder with Dad's rusty squirrel guard we leave the three largest trees massive in their feathery circumference bottom branches sweeping frosty grass so that come snow they will shroud ground leaving the inside cathedral dry and warm haven for cardinal finch and chickadee abundant blueberries feeding mockingbird and jay wind bruised bracts perfuming winter air and come New Year's woven again around the old wire frames to leave at the cemetery wreaths of remembrance for when the dead swung axes and timbered out the line barbed wire grown into trunks telling their age and the ages of those departed so that chain sawing to prune and sustain we work with a woodsman's respect keeping our covenant with tree and land: gifts unearned that lift us up that we're bound to love, preserve, protect.

Pat Anthony - Fontana, KS - metpvan@gmail.com

The Snow is Falling Like a Mist

The snow is falling like a mist Dispersed flecks of white Noticeable as a series of fine screens That filter the distant trees.

Harold Sneide - Indian Hills, CO - haroldsneide@comcast.net

feeble January sun struggles beneath clouds bones shiver

Susan M. Surette - Cotuit, MA - suesurette@gmail.com

Sheltering in Place

From pewter skies snowflakes fall upon mountain, valley and plain slippery coating glazes old stone wall which frigid temps cause to remain

Branches thicken beneath layered snow decorating shrubs and greenery below windblown pinecone drops and cleaves to empty path lined with russet leaves

White holds fast to frozen ground virgin footprints leave no sound gray squirrel nestles in ancient oak safe from winter rain's chilling soak

As cold cuts across one's vulnerable face small creatures seek their resting place finding sleep and shelter for the night before chilling glint of morning light

Susan M. Surette - Cotuit, MA - suesurette@gmail.com

Oakdale

Paper route through Idle Hour pulling a sled.

Too much snow to bike.

Too long to the end of Biltmore Avenue just to deliver one paper. Didn't go.

It haunts me still.

One customer invites me in for cocoa.

Then I continue on. The dark. The snow. My mind drifts.

Fred Briggs - Lake Mary, FL - fredbriggs15@gmail.com

A White Fleece

The sheep we let out regularly in the winter to drink and eat, and when snow fell wetting, collecting on the back of each ewe's thickening coat, I could sink my fingers in a fleece and feel, I would think, the wool that someday might keep me warm on a cold winter day, a day like today, when sheep are gathering snow white on white, a glistening fleece.

Edward J. Rielly - Westbrook, ME - erielly2@earthlink.net

Nature Through the Seasons

Spring, summer, fall, winter, nature is ever-shifting, ever wild.

One day, she dazzles-- sunlight spilling across blue skies, buds opening, the world becoming green.

The next, she rages-- clouds gathering, wind howling, rain or snow sweeping through the land.

Sometimes fierce, sometimes tender, she burns with heat, floods or withholds water, testing what dares to grow.

Until all eyes open to the reality of climate change, we can only stand beneath her changing face, savor her calm,
endure her fury, whisper thanks for her remaining beauty.

Abbie Johnson Taylor - Sheridan, WY - abbietaaylor945@gmail.com

January day cold gnaws fingers through warm gloves few flakes dot the ground

Abbie Johnson Taylor - Sheridan, WY - abbietaaylor945@gmail.com

January Lullaby

Caressed by a gentle breeze, Baby Bear, separated from Mama, wanders alone, lost.
Too young to know the season's lie, he should be dreaming in the dark, but melting snow and softened air have led him astray.

He doesn't know it's only January.

We can only hope sleep finds him, gathers him into warm arms, keeps him safe until spring awakens him.

Abbie Johnson Taylor - Sheridan, WY - abbietaaylor945@gmail.com

silent winter park a gray January day hardly any snow

Abbie Johnson Taylor - Sheridan, WY - abbietaaylor945@gmail.com

Wyoming winter abnormally warm weather what will summer bring

Abbie Johnson Taylor - Sheridan, WY - abbietaaylor945@gmail.com

When the Birds Come Back

May is when the green returns, and flowers make their comeback.
But what really makes May special-- is that's when the birds come back.

June bursts forth with vibrant life-- a thousand colors reappear.
Not only do plants and insects thrive, but those marvelous birds are here.

Then September comes along, and birds heed the southern call.
And in a matter of just a few days, there are hardly any birds at all.

October glows with color, as the summer days adjourn.
But my mind wanders to next May-- I can't wait for the birds' return.

December is stark and silent, winter has whitened the ground.
It gets me thinking of lilacs-- when the birds will be around.

April is part winter, part spring, when tulips show their survival skill.
It's nice--yet in a month or so, I'll hear that first songbird trill.

Life has its share of troubles, and I'm often taken aback.
But whatever happens, I'll be okay, as long as the birds come back.

Jim Story - Corvallis, MT - Jstory4689@gmail.com afternoon sun icicles falling from eaves stand in snow

Robert Savino - West Islip NY - dynsus@aol.com

Winter

The sky's unbroken whiteness meets the snowy plain.
The horizon is no more-- a seamless, endless domain.

A deafening hush pervades-- everything cold and still, barren but for stoic pines, wrapped in a breathless chill.

A lone raven searches-- the only life today.
A sharp crack resonates-- the ice has split its way.

Season of the long sleep, Nature's yearly rest in time.
A world of ice and silence-- unyielding wintertime.

Jim Story - Corvallis, MT - Jstory4689@gmail.com

Please feel free to share The Weekly Avocet with all those you know who love Nature poetry. Thank you! It's free, just email us your email address...

Hoarfrost haiku

Morning

Sunlight reveals three diamond sparklers hidden in frosty branches.

Noon

Trees gleam, then some wink.
Sun creates frosty sparklers, winter fireflies blink.

Afternoon

Fallen hoarfrost flakes catch sunlight. Rainbow colors-- sunset's sparklers gleam.

Vlasta Karol Blaha - Colby, WI - vkb66@frontier.com full moon a fawn keeps the dog barking

Norma Bradley - Asheville, NC - normabradley1@gmail.com

Total Disregard

Trash! trash! trash!
Does no one have regard for gardens—for streets in their own neighborhood?

I walk down front steps, see a paper cup with plunged straw next to my Japanese maple. A greasy wrapper from a slice of pizza hangs from a bush like a deranged Christmas ornament.

Another gripe is dog walkers who nonchalantly stop to let their dogs relieve themselves on street, or nearby lawns.
No cleanup; they simply walk away.

My neighbors keep frontage well-groomed, with a variety of flowers, and bushes rooted firmly in earth, happily drinking in rain water, honoring nature, as we all should.

S. McNulty - Staten Island, NY - sablonde49purple@gmail.com bejeweled nacreous sheet of white sun gleams on ice

S. McNulty - Staten Island, NY - sablonde49purple@gmail.com

Pristine Fantasy

Sidewalks gleam in thin covering of ice, swallowed by a pale sun.
Opalescent streets of pearl are unmarred by human feet.

Children peer out windows in wonder.
They dream of skating, sledding. Parents advise that it is dangerous, the ice too thin. The children vow to find a hilly place still swathed in snow for sledding.
For now, streets form a pristine fantasy.

S. McNulty - Staten Island, NY - sablonde49purple@gmail.com

Again, we get to share the work of a poet from down-under.

Attached

I've made so many foolish decisions you'd think I'd tread differently.

In winter empty skies turn cobalt blue.
A myna bird steps across a table top and the whole café is on alert.

Is that the bird's scat on my chair, or a small brown twig?

Take care. Don't brush strange things away with your sleeve like I did.

Here the cut Gerberas droop.
Who will sever the softened stems now that you have gone?

I remember the afternoons we walked through the cemetery memorising names on headstones, painful stories from our childhoods opening us to tenderness.

So many days have passed now, but here I am still, stuck at the end of the road.

Libby Sommer - Sydney, NSW

Are we ...

If all we can do in this unstable world is throw our hands in the air and say, this is the way things are, the way they have always been, then my plan is to grow a coat of fur, as well as a thick layer of fat under my skin, be a bear hibernating in its winter den.
When I look up a possum runs across the telephone line in front of my window, escaping before the light of dawn, and I marvel at the way he balances on that highwire, his skill in his nimble dance.
Compare this delight with all the killing, bombing and destroying and question ourselves, are we man or beast?

Libby Sommer - Sydney, NSW - libby@sommer.net.au

Black Birds

In leafy trees.
Are they crows or ravens up there, the bases of their feathers crow-white, or raven-grey?
Is it true crows can recognize people who befriend them for years after?
Alert, National Wildlife warns, crows stop and watch you rather than you watch them.
Fly away, birds, to wide open spaces, find an anthill, let the ants climb on, rub them into your black feathers, for another day of blitzing aggressors-- Aren't you afraid they'll swoop? I ask my friend who likes to walk beneath their winter roosting sites.
She smiles, "They're crows. They know a pal when they see one."

(Previously published in 2024 in my collection Flat White, One Sugar)

Libby Sommer - Sydney, NSW - libby@sommer.net.au

Amber Puppy

What can an amber puppy mean in a world of Siris and driverless cars?

I was older, one of the Baby Boomers. Life was a series of warnings: Don't fall over rugs or loose cords, don't overeat, don't go to bed before nine, drink coffee after midday, watch too much Netflix. When the new puppy arrived one birthday, rich brown as a raisin, I heard it shadowing me: Don't trip on the dog's lead.

There was much to be anxious about. One day, walking through the park – the rain had eased, spring waterfalls spilled into the creek, soon we would cool off under the trees – I lost my grip on the lead. Into the bushes he fled, disappearing into green. Since when did parks swallow small dogs? I drove home in a frantic car. My best friend. I'd loved him and he'd loved me.

The days staggered past like drunks. I prayed silently, absorbed sunshine, climbed steps, wrote Letters to the Editor. Don't panic, don't shallow breathe, don't think the worst – you could hear it all around. A reclining Buddha could show you how to deepen the breath. A bird call at first light could tell you when to get up. A storm could remember to fill the dams and the water tanks - I was meandering between the trees when I saw him scampering through the creek. Splashing around then shaking himself dry. A muddy escapee. A barking survivor.

Where had he been these three long days? I could wash him, wrap him in a towel, take him home. Unexpected good news could still happen. Dogs off-the-leash need to stay close to their mistresses. Trees shed their leaves in winter and dogs run away but find their way back. Seventy-two hours later, what can an amber puppy tell you in a world of Botox and identity theft?

See the difference between holding on and losing your grip.

(Previously published in Quadrant September 2019)

Libby Sommer - Sydney, NSW - libby@sommer.net.au

Please be the reason someone smiles today...

Time to share your Winter-themed poems for The Weekly Avocet.

Please read the guidelines before submitting

We love previously published poems!

Please send your submissions to: angeldec24@hotmail.com

Up to four Winter themed poems, Photos (4), haiku (up to 10), Saving Mother Earth Challenge poems (as many as you can write)

Please do not stack your info when submitting submissions, please have it: name - town, state - email address, in a line, just like it appears in both publications. Please do not make extra work for us. Thank you.

Please send your submissions to angeldec24@hotmail.com

Please put (early or late) Winter/your last name in the subject line.

Please be kind and address your submission to me, Charles. Thank you.

(Just so you know: I do not read work from a poet who doesn't take the time to address their submission to the editor, who they want to read their work.)

Please do not just send a poem, please write a few lines of hello.

Please do not have all caps in the title of your poem.

There is no line limit per poem.

Please no religious references.

Please use single spaced lines.

Please remember, we welcome previously published poems.

Please put your name - town/state - email address under your poem. No Zip codes.

Please send your poems in the body of an email or in one attachment, no pdf file.

We look forward to reading your Winter submissions.

Please think about becoming a supporting member of The Avocet community. The Avocet is only $28.00 for 4 - 64 pages, perfectly bound issues and 52 weeks of The Weekly Avocet, every weekend, plus other poetry surprises, with the best Nature poetry by the best Nature poets in America, a steal of a deal.

Please make your check out to The Avocet and send to:

The Avocet
P.O. Box 19186
Fountain Hills, AZ 85269

All donations are greatly appreciated, so if you have been enjoying all the Nature poetry, please think about making a small donation. Each year it gets harder and harder to keep our doors open. Thank you for supporting The Avocet and The Weekly Avocet.

The Burning Question for us Earthlings is:

What are you/we going to do to stop or even just slow down Climate Change?

Do you feel like there is nothing you can do about climate change?

Well, there is, even if we all do small things it will make a great difference. Alice C. Hill (the David M. Rubenstein senior fellow for energy and the environment at the Council on Foreign Relations.) states the first thing we all need to do is not shy away from the subject. Talk about, write about, climate change to everyone you know and meet. Write to your congressperson and Senators. Let them know what you think and fear!

I want to have, at least, one Saving Mother Earth poem in each issue of The Weekly Avocet, so I am always looking for poems that address our most important issues of today, so please write about what you think and fear of the coming end of our world as we know it. A world our great grandkids will never know. A Mother Nature who is no longer kind.

But if we join together, maybe, just maybe, working together, we can make a difference to Save Mother Earth, the only home we have. Show you care. There are so many topics to write about when it comes to Climate Change. Please find one you are passionate about and write about it!

Write a Tell-off poem letting the world know what you are feeling about what is being done right before our eyes by those who claim to want what best for all of us. Think it out in your head, then put it down on the page, then fight with it, get your rage out, then send it to us to share, so you can see your voice, your words, being read, being heard...

The American Avocet

I watch unseen this large, long-legged shorebird, with its pied plumage and a dash of red around its head and neck, scampering along the coastline searching to snatch-up some aquatic insect or a small invertebrate hidden beneath the brackish waters of this saltmarsh.
I watch unseen
it swing its odd, long, up-curved bill through the shallow, still waters, catching a tiny creature, trapping it in its bill, racing off to its nest to feed her four hatchings with this feast she found.

I watch in awe as the male grows protective, fearlessly fending off an encroaching common black raven, attacking this intruder, striking at it with its bill.

I watch in wonder as they swim as a family just days after the young ones are born, then back to the nest to rest where its kind flocks together in a community.

Charles Portolano - Fountain Hills, AZ - cportolano@hotmail.com

We hope we provoked you; that you leave having experienced a complete emotional response to the poetry found in each issue of The Weekly Avocet. I want to thank our Poets for sharing their work with us this week. And “Thank you for reading, dear reader!”

Be well, see you next weekend,

Charles Portolano, Editor/Publisher and Vivian and Valerie Portolano, Co-Editors of The Avocet, a Journal of Nature Poetry and The Weekly Avocet, every weekend.

Copyright © 2026 by The Avocet (for our poets)